Power Granted to Student Board To Enforce Campus Regulations

800 Loyola students will come under the jurisdiction of a new board of inquisition following the announcement here today that such a board would be empowered by the school administration to handle violations of campus regulations next fall.

Marines Drive Off Attack By Rabid Loyola Students

Last Tuesday the Loyola Students for Socialistic and Solatious Activities committee for the upgrading of Communist satellite countries staged a massive protest set up in the Student Union.

Students of the college spontaneously rallied to the LSSA cause and rent-a-cops had to be called in to quell the turmoil. Although neither of the two marines were hurt, seven students were slain and scores were wounded.

T. H. E. Hawk, head of the subversive group, was upset that so many of the LSSA members had been arrested, "Why me, why couldn't I have been arrested. How can I get a promotion in the party when I haven't even been picked up."

The following are from Fr. Bourboni's FBI File on this pinko. Mr. Hawk, who is also involved with the Little Sisters of South America, an organization branded by Fr. Bourbonni as a leftist cover-up group, is not a Loyola student, as he does not attend classes here.

Fr. Bourbonni, dean of boys, announced that "suitable sanctions will be imposed." An immediate search party set out after Hawk.

Hawk, who uses the assumed name Charlie Brown, is thought to be in the vicinity of the Mt. St. Anguish Home, where he has many contacts. Hawk is often seen in the company of Miss Lloyd Bridges, one of the Home's employees.

Hawk and his trusted henchmen, Jimmie "The Wax Dummy" Brannon, 'Italian Joe' Cetallo and Wilhelm Messer led their battle-hardened troops of LSSA hard core members.

Although the wily Hawks managed to out-flank the marines Phalanx, the two marines arranged their force into a salient. Thus the Hawk's forces were cut in half. Hawk might still have won had not the Wax Dummy retreated and left him stranded.

Hawk's rabid supporters soon found themselves leaderless as Hawk had gone for reserves. While Hawk rounded up the well-known campus activists—and we know that there are a vast number of activists at Loyola—the Marines dealt a crushing blow to the rioters.

According to student deputy Robert Lidstrom, this step by the college authorities proves that they recognize the maturity and capability of the students to handle their own affairs in a "meaningful" fashion.

While deputy Lidstrom was unclear on what the board would do in the future, the present legislation calls for five student inquisitors who will judge the guilt or innocence of students brought before them.

The new board will serve primarily a judicial function as it will not yet have the power to determine what campus regulations will be.

Opponents of the plan have maintained that the students are "getting took." They feel that because the Grand Disiplinary Dragon will still make the rules and come before the board to tell its members who has violated the rules, that the power of the board is rather circumscribed.

In short, Davis Toolshed feels that the system is geared to immaturity and gives no significant authority or responsibility to the students. "They couldn't make a mistake if they wanted to".

This debate between the supporters and opponents of the board has been rather limited in effect, however, in that no one outside of the Student Reichstag even knows that the board is going to fine them for not going to mass every morning rather than protect them from prosecution as was hoped.

Proponents of the bill have countered neatly by pointing out that they had no hope of obtaining anything else from the administration and "well, what with elections coming up and everything, what difference does it make whose side we jump to".

There always exist the possibility that in the future the administration will allow the students to change the penalties imposed by the board but as Deputy Lidstrom pointed out, "they could also chuck the whole thing out a window anytime they please."

Lecture Will Describe Conquest of Bourbonni

This weeks guess lecturer in the ever continuing Boremann Lecture Series is Miss Henrietta Bogdown-Prude, explorer, phycist, and sonumambulast. Miss Bogdown-Prude made the news most recently after her unfortunate abortion of an attempt to scale the Bourbonni Mountain range.

Miss Prude is a graduate of the Catholic Charm School of the East, the First Catholic Womans College in America. A summa cum after winter student, she became interested in mountain climbing in a Junior year abroad (?) program at the Charm School.

Miss Bogdown-Prude obtained a doctorate in the geo-physics of asphalt mountain build up and erosion under the tutelage of Fran "Sis" Bourbonni. This is the same "Sis" Bourbonni who discovered the mountain range named after her.

Miss Prude started out April 1, 1967 with 200 Sirpa guides and $75,000 worth of equipment to scale the Bourbonni Range. Attacking the range from the treacherous southern face of Lanahan Mountain, the most notorious of the Bourbonni group.

"In retrospect, I think we should have proceeded through Notsew pass. This pass has a wide mouth and the warm winds through the mouth of Notsew present an accessible approach with more moderate climate. Yes, perhaps we should have gone through more conventional channels in attacking Bourbonni so that we could be credited with ruining its reputation for treachery. We found that the Bourbonni is the most unreasonable thing that we had ever encountered."

Miss Bogdown-Prude's group was harassed by the immense snows of the Bourbonni and forced to proceed through the ever dangerous Kuran Gay. Kuran gap, that almost lovely death trap with an unnatural red ice flow heading it, strikes fear into even the the least dramatically tended climber. The vacillations of the Kuran ice are well known, but the Kuran is always unpredictable in its actions.

After crossing Kuran, the party went through Speakwell pass. Speakwell is a man-made pass cut through the Bourbonni's by Zav Speakwell, professor of physics at Loyola. After the solace of the speakwell, however, their climb became almost strait up. "Actually we could have taken a less steep method of attack, but after the demise of about 100 of our guides we dared not risk the red hog."

The red hog, one of the key peaks in the Bourbonni, that slippery domed monster with which one must wrestle to gain every foot hold. But behind the hog are the flacid lowlands of the leadership rotacy, and the miniscule obstacle course of the Davis Sub Group.

Instead Henrietta chose to go above the head lands of the Dean to sanctuary at the simple driscole like caves. Those small, dank, almost cellar-like inclusions where one can find rest save from the mundane rumblings which one expects from a driscole. Near the driscole are the strange fires from the bottomless Kirwan and the supposed land of the yenta. Yenta, those posulated missing links between men and men at Loyola.

"No we never encountered any yentas, but we weren't too unhappy about this. On my next expedition I plan to ask Fr. Lassagna and Dr. Zeek Harris to come along in case we do find any of them."

The party was forced to return (Look on page 2)

Aphrodisiac Goes Nine Feet

Dr. Mel le Fly and Dr. Norbert Viener of Loyola College's Alechemy Department have been awarded the James Bond Medal, for Inter-Personal Chemistry. The award was granted in light of their break through in the synthesis of aphrodisiacs from every day materials. Their first "pill", called the super sandwich, is reported to have astounding effects on the eater.

Tom Klankey, a student who volunteered to test the sandwich, for the good of the society, reported that the pill had a multitude of effects.

Commenting on the new pill, Klan stated "Well, its nice, but its a lot to swallow. That's a funny. One of the big drawbacks is size. The pill is 9 feet long . . . and you gotta' eat all of it. Also there are other side effects.

"It is part of the Greyhound's policy to be champion of the little things in College life—the things folks let pass by unnoticed. Our first efforts have borne fruit, as witness last Monday's response to our word on traditions.

We are glad to note that "Ave Maria Day" will be inspiring reality of all the years to come."

Very Little Noswot

Once upon a time in a little kingdom south of Noswot, there lived a bright young ruler known as the strong Father. He was so powerful in his baliwick, that soon he became depressing and blind to the wishes of his people. Fearful taxes he levied and in time a group started to work for his ouster. This group of daring Musketeers flaunted his rules and regulations even to the point of refusing to wear the symbol of the peasant, the neck shackle and half sack cloth. They named him "Papa Bear", and ridiculed the black magic he used in attempting to rule.

Soon, the taxes became not enough to support the country, and he was forced to scour neighboring nations for aid. In his absence he left the chief of the secret police in charge. The chief was feared even more than the Strong and was known only as the Bullet. It was rumored, that once the Bullet had been an aspiring practitioner of the magic rites on which the kingdom was built, (in a nation far across the sea), but an indiscretion had led to his dismissal.

Once the Bullet had power, he laid down his heavy fist. No one could join a guild he roared, nor drink the juice of the grape and anyone seen without the shackle and sack cloth would be subject to pursuit across the length and breadth of the country. The people, so used they were to Papa Bear, accepted all that came with bent backs and blank minds.

Now more than ever the Musketeers fought, but all was for nought Iselgar, the leader, was powerless, and the lesser ones, like the peat cutter from the bog, the court wit, the crammer of sausages, and the man whose face was so forceful that he was called the Crag, fell by the wayside, or planned for escape. Still they worked, but deep down they knew that their time was short. They trudged to the halls of books, to be taught the quotations from the founder of the great cult of black magic, as did all the peasants, and dreamed of free kingdoms and more reasoning rulers.

From beyond the horizons came word of free nations with no such idiotic laws, but to the great surprise of the Musketeers, the masses took the news with no comment. Suddenly, the members of the fellowship looked around, and saw that none of the issues could raise a cry from the people. The Bullet had done what he had set out to do, the people were mindless and docile, their minds were filled with nonsense to a level which prevented thought. Yes, the Bullet's job had been done so effectively that on one of his infrequent trips back to the nation, the Strong One congratulated and lauded his Head Bullet.

"Well done my good and faithful servant, you have seen to it that our proud nation will be kept in the same condition that it was in when our fathers' fathers' fathers died."

"Yes," replied the Bullet, "always will our proud nation be this way, good and solid, with none of those filthy ideas of thought creeping in."

And the two stood on the promontory, looking out on their well-laundered minions and thought such thoughts as they had just spoken. The thoughts themselves were echoed by the sound of silence, and the rest of the world yawned with disinterest, for after all, it was a very small Kingdom.

Book Review

With the heavy flow of new theological works coming over from Europe, it was only to be expected that American religionists would enter their contributions to the Church's aggiornamento. The first such work of major importance will appear on April 1: A Gnu Cataclysm. Published by Hurter and Hurting, the nation's leading sado-inasochist publisher. The Cataclysm is the combined work of: Dr. Timothy Leery, L. S. D.; Mr. James Cavana, A. W. O. L.; Maharishi Mahesh Yogibear, and Sr. Raquel Welch, B. O. D. While conforming to the question/answer formula of "Baltimore No. 3", the methodology of the Cataclysm is more in keeping with the spirit of the times:

Q. Who made you?

A. A lady isn't supposed to tell; but for argument's sake, let's say God did: it's a groove.

Q. Why did God make you?

A. For kicks, baby; to know love, and freak with him in this condition, and to trip out with him in the next.

Going beyond this question/answer methodology, however, the Cataclysm begins to innovate. The authors have taken the liberty of proclaiming three new Doctors of the Church: Teilhard de Chardin; Romanus Cardinal Sheewolf; and Mama Cass. They have also renamed the Holy Patroness of the United States: Lady Madonna, Top Banana, Mother of the Living trip, Bride of the Walrus.

Going into doctrine, the authors present new interpretations, some of which are startling in terms of contemporary insight. Most controversial of their new disputations is the explanation of the Incarnation/Redemption mystery: "He just dropped in to see what condition His Condition was in." The book received its Imprimatur from the Most Reverend Bishop James Kapica, O. S. A. (Apostate Fathers).

A most readable book, the Cataclysm's pages are adorned with cartoons by Gone Wilson, some familiar hymns (I'm just Wild About Mary, and Mary's Wild About ME), some newer ones (liberally censored) by Alan Ginsberg and Tulli Kupfelberg, and some original litanies; very original:

America's first effort toward getting involved in the "new" Church is, thus, an admirable one. Sicket Toomey, a Spokesman for Hurter & Hurting, called it "a millstone. We can only hope that a work of this magnitude will not discourage other courageous young theologians from attempting to vivisection Christianity, make it more relieving to modern America." When asked about the dangers of misconstructions on the part of impressionable readers, Mr. Toomey quipped, "Hell, the Protestants have been interpreting for themselves for centuries; I never heard of Father Divine complaining."

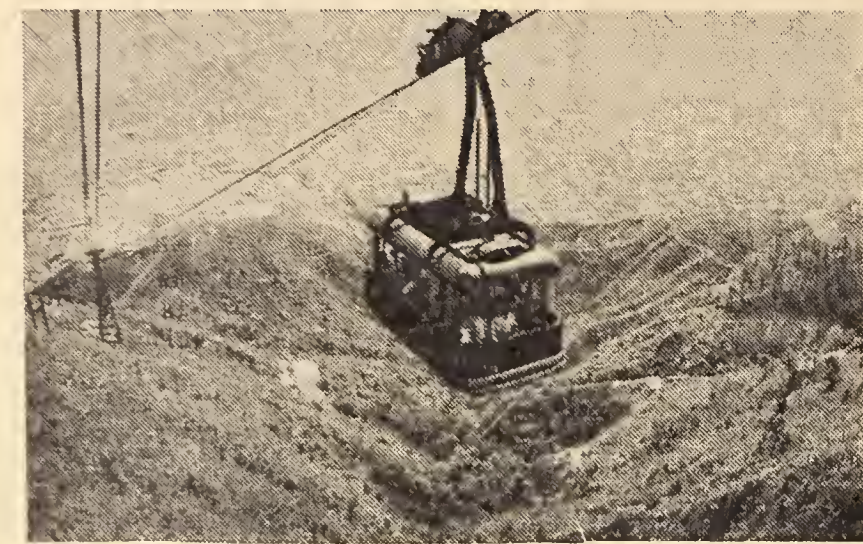

to their base camp after troubles with oxygen equipment and outbreaks of nosebleeds amongst the shirpas. "Poor devils," noted Bogdown-Prude, "they just weren't able to cope with the altitude. The highest they'd ever been before this expedition was the peaks of the himalayas. I never should have taken them along."

After recuperating at Mt. St. Anguish Home for Worn out Girls, Miss Bogdown-Prude appeared on nationwide television to tell the world of her expedition. On Bold Journey, she made what could be called the ultimate statement about the range. "Those Bourbonni's are enigmatic. They seem to be so trivial when one sees them at a distance. Up close, working with the Bourbonni's, one sees them in a different light. The bourbonni's are the most vicious things that I have ever encountered."

S G Ignored by Administrators; Power Passed to New Movement

Loyola College was stunned last night with President Kelley Sallinger's announcement that he had given en full and complete power over all aspects of running the school to a Student Oligarchy. Fr. Sallinger noted in his passionate address that three years of running "this damn place" had taken all his strength and he did not feel that he could continue running the school in the manner to which it is accustomed.

The oligarchy headed by strong man Jon Gnott moved immediately to consider issues which have borne the bone of student contention over the years.

The board, in its manifest prudence, defined what it thought "coat and tie" meant. Notsew deposed student leader and now Mr. Gnott's liason officer, pleaded that the board not act hastily "Come on guys, if we settle this now, what'll we do for an issue in the future? Also we gott'a instill in the students here the idea that we got the power." Reds Kuran, responsible court jester then suggested that a statement on coat and tie be formulated that would both let the student body know that the oligarchy was considering action and show the students where the real campus power lay.

The oligarchy then voted on Mr. Kuran's statement, passed it and awarded him a Responsible Student Leader Award—third class. Davis Toolsher, Oligarchy Secretary then released this statement:

"Now get this real good . . . This is our rule, we want it . . . and the student body's gonna keep it."

After the meeting Mr. Toolsher, editor of Ignites Magazine—the guide book for the complete idiot—stated that the intent of the S. G. statement should not be misinterpreted to mean that there will be no further discussion on this issue.

"Now, of course we will allow discussion on the issue, its just that action is pending."

Commenting on the initial meeting sub-chairman Lou Goldbrick said gleefully: "Campus politics are cute, . . . and personal grievances are even cuter."

"It's not my bag," says Izzie Notsew in happier days

Soul Man to Appear for Hangups

On Sunday, April 14, the Hangups with God seminar will present Rev. Whirling Dervish, C.J. who will speak on "Soul: its influence upon the rhythm system and vice versa." Fr. Dervish is a graduate of Motown University. He received his S.T.B. (Sock it To me Baby) from Wouldn'tsockit University, having studied under the nation's leading spiritualist, Fr. Jung L. Wrotte, S.J.

Fr. Dervish is the recipient of numerous awards, most recently having been presented with the Soul Man of the Year award of the Confraternity of Blessed Otis. He is also the best-selling author of such books as: Keep the Faith, My Son, his manual for Catholic youth; Tell It Like It Is, a treatise on confession; Can't Help Myself, a book on situation ethics, written with Uretha Franklin; An Outdated Priest Looks at His Modern Church; and his newest, Expressway to Your Soul, a collection of prayers and meditations for modern man.

"My favorite prayer," Fr. said during a Greyhound interview, "is the one popularized by that great mystic, Daddy Fats: Good Googaloogamoogo Poppa, Momma, Stoppa. Actually, all it means is Thanks to the Father for all things, through the glorious BVM. Of course, it's a little abbreviated."

Writhing a convincing Twiggy Walk with a sweet young fourteen-year-old donated by the Scurvy Cott Show, Fr. gave this statement on soul: "Yeah, soul heightens . . . excites man's awareness of the aesthetic. And like its resulting effect on the body is cool as A MOOSE!! By the way, man, . . . you got a nickel?"

Following his appearance at Loyola, Fr. Dervish will return to his position as chaplain for the Marvelottes.

At many times during matriculation at college, students find it necessary to do Library Research a euphemism for drudgery. Therefore, the editors of the GAYHOUND in their manifest wisdom, present a small exercise in such things. The following questions all have answers. Should any reader of the GAYHOUND, who has never at ANY time been a member of the GREYHOUND staff, answer these questions by 9:00 p.m. this date they will be awarded the magnanimous sum of $2.32 by the new staff of the GREYHOUND.

- 1) Who was the star of "The Jolson Story"?
- 2) What stars have won two (2) academy awards in succession?
- 3) From roles in the movie "No time for Sergeants" several actors went on to starring roles in T.V. series?
- 4) Name the star of "Il Bidone"?
- 5) From where to where does Churchill's Iron Curtain extend, what lies behind it?
- 6) Name, in order, the second, third and fourth ships in the German battle line and the British battle line at the time the two lines met at the Battle of Jutland?
- 7) Concerning the movie "Escape in the Desert":
  - a) Who was the male star?
  - b) Of what movie was this a remake?
  - c) Who were the stars of the original version?
  - d) What was the source of the original, author?
- 8) Who were the leaders of Britain, France, Germany, and Austria-Hungary:
  - a) At the beginning of WWI?
  - b) At the Armistice?
  - c) Following the Treaty of Versailles?
- 9) When did Anglo-Egypt cease to exist, year?
- 10) What, exactly was contained in the cornerstone of the Jenkins Library?
- 11) Do Hotel managers suffer from triscadeckaphobia?
- 12) What was the first American Film shot in Italy, who were the stars, who was the producer?
- 13) Who directed "The Pride and the Passion", "The Magnificent Ambersons", and "Trapeze"?
- 14) Who starred in "Back Streets"?
- 15) What actress said: "My name Tandelaho"?
- 16) Who directed "A Place in the Sun", "Diary of Anne Frank"?
- 17) Stars of movie "Best years of our Lives"? (3)
- 18) What was unusual about "Dial'M for Murder" and "Kiss Me Kate"? (Common feature).
- 19) Who directed "Man with a Golden Arm", "Marty"?
- 20) What was Ford Foundation's successful TV series?

Not to be outdone by the "Nationalist Catholic Reporter", and desiring to contribute to the controversy which has gripped the nation that subject revolution—the GAYHOUND brought together a distinguished panel of Loyola personalities to obtain a consensus of campus opinion. Participants in the discussion were Mr. Soc Hogel, Mrs. Sew Don, Fr. Bog Brither and Fr. T.B.B.R. At., S.J.

The discussion was moderated by Mische Much, a sophomore member of the GAYHOUND staff.

M.M.: Let's start by defining our areas of discussion. First, should we hold a discussion on this matter at all, and second, what topics are of primary concern?

FR. AT: Yes, I think we should definitely hold meaningful discussions on substantive issues; as I have said in the past, I will go anywhere, see any student, discuss any topic, at any time, to advance the dialogue between the Administration and the students. Let us have meaningful discussion.

M.M.: Would anyone like to suggest a topic?

Hogel.: Well, since we have previously ascertained that the "coats and ties issue" is too limited a subject for discussion, I would like to suggest that we go to the bottom of the "coats and ties" question. The issue at stake, as I see it, is: Who formulates the policies of the college, and what role will the students assume in making those policies.

FR. At: Well, I had hoped that we couldn't discuss anything quite that meaningful. How about golf?

M.M.: If I can make a non-objective comment, I think the faculty and the administration are ignorant of the real issues at stake.

B.B.: You call me ignorant one more time and you get a fist in your mouth.

Don: Actually, Fr. Brither, I think this comment shows that you really do sympathize with the students, it's just your "rhetoric" that causes a little "misunderstanding".

M.M.: Let's return to the subject: discussing policy formation on the campus.

FR. At: Let me not be misunderstood, I never said that a certain "issue" couldn't be discussed, I only suggested that it was my rule, and that it would never be changed under any circumstances at any time.

Don: The problem is one of making the students understand that experience does mean something in the world. After all, every faculty member has been a student, but no student has been a faculty member. Students must learn that to get what they want they must learn how to ask for what they want. You won't get what you want by charging into the Dean of Men's office and acting unreasonably, stating your demands in harsh terms, unwilling to compromise.

B.B.: That's right. Students shouldn't charge into my office asserting their demands in unreasonable language, and anyone who does will get a fist in his mouth.

FR. At: Don't you think this discussion has gotten a little too meaningful?

Hogel: The question we were discussing was policy formation, and what role the students will play in the formation of policy. Now, as I see it, students are beginning to see that to accomplish their goals, they need only apply the proper amount of pressure to the right point to attain the desired goal.

B.B.: But the boys don't realize that we are trying to give them a good education, and the boys should trust us to do a good job on them.

FR. At: At least give us the benefit of the doubt; people are pulling in so many directions, that I don't see how anyone could expect me to move in their direction, or to move at all.

Don: You are subject to so many pressures, that's true. But let's get back to the original discussion and the topic of revolution. In my opinion, anyone who would revolt against the established order, that is, anyone who would go outside the "law", thereby forfeits his right to live. Every student has certain rights, but some actions will cause him to forfeit those rights.

M.M.: What actions of a student could cause him to forfeit his rights?

Don: Well, first of all, he would have to question the wisdom and experience of teachers. Then he would have to express his views on the established order, thus giving himself to be a "mouthpiece" for certain faculty members.

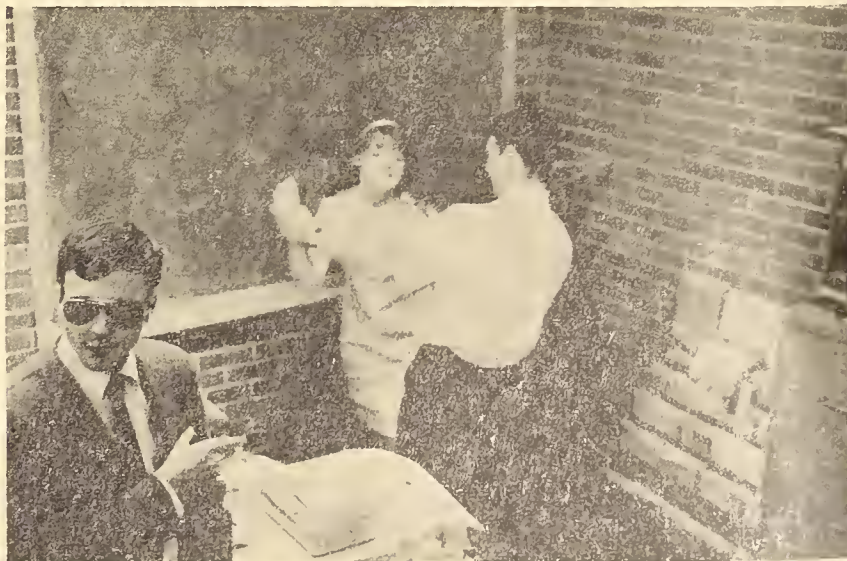

FR. At: Well, this discussion proved most satisfactory to me, and I think that we have definitely opened up a line of communication.

M.M.: But we haven't said anything at all!

B.B.: See me in my office.

FR. At: Gee, I'm trying awfully hard to establish a meaningful dialogue here on campus, but look what happens—you call a meeting and nobody shows up.

B.B.: They're all in my office.

GAYHOUND SPORTS EDITORIAL

This week I would like to change my tack from questioning apathetic athletic cognoscenti or urging adequate athletic support. For this is the Gayhound! On this most (e)spatial (my page lacks copy) occasion, I am going to solve one of organized Sports' most engrossing problems—that of sex determination for unmale athletes. Actually, I uncovered the solution to this happy problem during a discussion with the most famous man on campus in such matters.

But to give the solution without first presenting a problem would be mondo bad. So ... here's the problem as told to me.

"... was once a weird state in which, for some reason as yet unknown goyles looked like goyles. Well, most of them did ... Four of them? Whatever, (sigh). In this state, called Nu Joysee by Enunciators Anomalous, most of these goyles broomsticked south to yet another state, Murlinn. An important thing to note is that all of these goyles are physically fleet. To end a long 'short introduction,' these goyles are the cause of the sex controversy by their very bodies."

Armed with this obtuse evidence, I continued my search for the "nitty-grit", so to speak, after deciding to exclusively misuse the student (that's you) trust. By pooling my resources, I discovered some surprising statistics.

Seven out of ten girls are not female impersonators.

Captain Kanguru flies united usually.

Hobey isn't the right way, even if you are a surfboard.

Olive Oil loves Tom's swift horse.

Love is not just for deviates.

Bobby Kennedy washes the diapers in his house.

Lois Lane is a lush ... blond.

Only Emmitsburg could breed a Mountie.

Zarathustra is alive and says "hi!" to all his friends.

As you can readily perceive, this neatly ties into the problem at hand. The solution is simply to put the delected to the delected. When you apply the delected to goyle athletes, it immediately tells you whether the athlete is a goyle or boyle. If her eyes light up you can be sure she's a goyle because "her" is a pronoun used to describe goyles.

However, if his eyes light up, you're in a peck of trouble because "his" is a pronoun used to describe the slave class of the world. Actually, this case obviously is double trouble for you because you must convince him that you didn't really mean that in the first place. Goyles have shown that they have less trouble giving the test than boyles because goyles feel more secure with other goyles, and boyles from Evergross either go along with the joke or are too "Christian Gennunmunly" to tell. Anyhow, all of this means female athletes have nothing to worry about. They can always check on a suspicious fellow by asking to see her draft card. On the other hand, prominent athletes in the sports of wrestling, boxing, rugby, and football have decried the sex barrier as harmful to the future development of the Viking philosophy. After all, do you ever hear of Viking men worrying about whether their women care? Beware of Vikings with steel delected!

Olympic Training Program Hidden in R.O.T.C. Drill

The year 1968 promises to be a big one and one of the reasons that is going to help it to be great is that the 1968 Olympics will be held in Mexico City in October.

The United States is sending a team of putrid athletes to participate in the games. And, it is through a very reliable source whose name I'm not supposed to mention, I have learned that the team consists of the Loyola College ROTC Cadet Battalion.

Contrary to what many people believe, the Tuesday morning Leadership Lab periods are not fun and games. They contributed to a very essential part of the training that has been forced upon these cadets in order to be able to field this team in October. Each exercise that they learn is very important in building their ability to withstand pain. Because of this, I would like to point out, that our team is very unique and the only one of its kind. It is a known fact that the toughest event in the Olympics is the decathlon. This event takes a very special kind of athlete. It takes an athlete who can withstand pain. Therefore, because of the exercises that each cadet does on Tuesdays, every cadet will be qualified by the end of May to enter this grueling event.

I asked Coach Hershler, the Battalion Training Officer, what events the different exercises prepared one for and he explained a few of them for me. "A" Company is renowned for its skill in rifle drill. By perfecting the rifle press over the shoulder, that Company will enter the weightlifting competition enmasse.

"Ranger" Company as a whole, is expert in the low crawl. This will make them our track(?) men. This skill is so refined in the "Ranger" Company that they should sweep the cross-country.

Battalion bayonet drill has been preparing a fencing team with untold possibilities, (fortunately). Of course by far the most natural skill that every cadet without exception possesses is that of broad jumping. Although every cadet will be qualified for the decathlon, Denny's Lawnrats stands as the odds on favorite. The main reason why he is the top dog (Hound, as it were) is that he skips all the drills.

It may not be common knowledge but one of the best of the yearling class is Carlozo de Mai. An ace diver, he has been spotted at all the big dives in town.

Loyola Grapplers Reveal Hidden Talents

Chunky Coach Tom Milligan bid his gladiators a sad "avoir" today and turned them loose to roam the globe and develop their interests in other activities, legal or otherwise.

First to challenge the outside world was the Titanic Tike, Chick Shelly, who got served at the Patch Bar. Tom "the spider" Flip, nicknamed thus because he often bit his opponents in the small of the back, has entered the Olympics as a javelin and has promised to return afterwards to the planet where he came from.

Flip's understudy Chick "the Socilian Scavenger" Kelly, winner of the Heist-man Trophy at the season's close, is currently in the final stages of his planned heist of the Queen Mary. Chick's vigorous competition with the Mafia is one reason Loyola does not schedule many Italian Colleges.

Joel Sweren & his friend Dr. Chan have established a very successful (yen-wise) Chinese restaurant in the DMZ between Paraguay and Uruguay. Leaf Evans, has changed his major to Art and Law, and was last seen selling dance tickets to the Vice-Squad.

Dormie Bob Awalt has plotted numerous bomb scares in the Dean of Men's office, as well as in the area of the Sahara Desert.

Beatle Bailey at 152 has ran away from home to join the Japanese Navy. He has run out of good old American "dish pan" sayings and wishes to recruit Japanese slander in his vocabulary in an effort to shock old ladies.

If you see Beatle help set him straight by giving him a ticket to Detroit. He can be recognized easily. He is the only guy we know who keeps muttering, "at least I never got pinned."

Next on our list is Jim Himler. If he is not remembered for his outstanding performances this year, which I doubt he will be, he will be remembered as the only hairy muscle with a smile on its face that never laughed without criticism from his teammates (Yuk! Yuk!).

Off the mat into the Belvedere, we will interview the ferocious B. O. Pretz. Here at the home of B. O. stems the battle cry "Remember the Belvedere" which inspired this spirited drinker—grappler rather, to many last minute victories. Many thanks to Bud for keeping B. O. in shape.

If anyone happens to see Pretz's understudy, Jerry "Grease" Bellrot, please inform him that he is not Willie Mays. In trying to duplicate that tremendous mid-night fall of Grazy Gus, Jerry suffered a severe blow on the head and has since thought he was a National League outfielder.

At 177 appears Duck McAllstar the man who was always in shape but never gave anybody else that impression. While Duck was not steaming mentally and physically around the gym, he was busy leading Vigilante raids, on locker rooms (most probably girls'), gas stations and his mother's refrigerator.

By stripping heads off of parking meters, Duck was able to finance his way to the Maxon-Dixon Wrestling Tournament, where he engraved his name in the Lacrosse Hall of Fame roster while Hopkins officials were sleeping. Duck's dream has come true. By the way Duck took a third in that same tournament making it a complete weekend for Duck.

We are embarrassed to say that Mic "The Hick" Caller at 191, will be returning next year, trying to duplicate his great upset in this year's tournament. While being employed in slopping it up at a premier Sheep and Hog farm, Mic has managed to spare time to take his 10 & 0 record to the AAU. God help them or is that Sisk!

During the wrestling season there seemed to be an Indian War raging at Heavyweight. Rick "Indian" Caar, and Gym "The General" Fillin continued their ferocious battle till the end of the season, when Caar, tied for the fastest fall with an anonymous hero. Caar took a survey of the Hopkins ceiling in approximately 26 seconds.

Back to the home front, this reporter had an opportunity to interview Fillin on the approximate cause of the Indian war. Fillin kept complaining that Caar's feather was always tickling him.

A farewell salute is credited to Skinny Morrison as we still watch Skinny trying to get down to 180. Come back in 10 years! However Skinny did do an outstanding job, if you can consider what he did outstanding. Good luck in lacrosse Skinny, it appears right now it will need it more than you.
